Abstract of the Talk

Nearly 80% of enterprise data is unstructured, with much of an organization's critical knowledge embedded in documents. Yet accessing, reasoning over, and operationalizing that knowledge has historically been difficult. Traditional approaches focused on document processing, search, and extraction but often stopped short of enabling meaningful decisions and action. This session presents how Document Intelligence is evolving into Enterprise Knowledge Intelligence, and why that shift is becoming foundational in the era of Agentic AI. From traditional enterprise search and Intelligent Document Processing, through RAG and Agentic RAG, to emerging autonomous decisioning systems, the evolution is moving from retrieval systems to reasoning systems and increasingly, to action-oriented systems. Through real-world enterprise transformations, this session highlights how organizations are unlocking untapped knowledge, improving decision velocity, reducing operational friction, and driving measurable business outcomes. It will showcase how documents are moving beyond passive repositories of information to becoming strategic inputs for intelligent systems and decision automation. As AI shifts from answering questions to driving actions, the next frontier is rethinking how enterprise knowledge is activated.
